PREFACE

FREE CANADIAN MATERIALS was originally intended to follow the pattern of In Search of Canadian Materials, that is to be organized according to curriculum subjects. Because of the nature of the public information provided in these free pamphlets and booklets, however, it was soon discovered that most of the materials fell into categories of health, industry, careers and science. It was decided, therefore, to simply list the items generally by publishing agency or address, and to provide an index to broad subject matter. What follows is only a sample of the myriad of print material available in Canada. Because of space constraints, I included little commercial material: much of it is thinly disguised advertising rather than relevant information.

A word of advice: government and business publication agencies sent me materials for review on the understanding that they would not be inundated by requests for their pamphlets. In these times of forced economic restraint, it makes good sense to order only what material is needed, preferably single copies for the verticle file.

The following are addresses of sources of further free material:

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The original suggestion for this bibliography of free materials came from Donna Phillips, who, while she was compiling In Search of Canadian Materials, found that she was forced to exclude many valuable items simply because they were free materials. Her offer to develop a separate bibliography of free materials was enthusiastically accepted by the Canadian Studies Project. For this valuable complement to In Search of Canadian Materials, therefore we are very largely indebted to Donna Phillips. We also appreciate the devoted efforts of our secretaries: Lynda Hause, Jocelyn Delipper and Joan Abramsson.
